Application request for a research blog on Hypotheses

Fill the form to present your editorial project and to apply for a research blog on Hypotheses (http://en.hypotheses.org/).

How do I fill in the form?

The form is divided into several steps and requires a certain amount of time to enter your data.

You can save the information you have already provided and come back to it later by clicking on “Finish later”. You will then be asked to choose a username and password and will receive an automatic email containing a link to the questionnaire you need to complete.

Please note that you will need to choose a new username and password each time you save the form and come back later.

Who do I contact?

If you encounter any problems when filling out the form, do not hesitate to contact us at hypotheses@openedition.org (hypotheses@openedition.org).

There are 26 questions in this survey.

Step 1 – General informations on the scholarly blog
Main language of the blog *

Choose one of the following answers
Please choose only one of the following:

- German
- English
- Spanish
- French
- Italian
- Portuguese
- Other

Title of the blog *

Please write your answer here:

We recommend that you choose a relatively short title (no more than 50 characters) and that you do not change this title once the blog has been added to the OpenEdition catalogue (https://www.openedition.org/catalogue-notebooks). You must inform the Hypotheses team of any change to the title, particularly if the blog has an ISSN.

Please note that blogs are not automatically added to the catalogue. Blogs are added to the catalogue once they are structured and regularly updated. To learn more, see the post "Your blog in the OpenEdition catalogue (https://houseofblogs.hypotheses.org/1322)" published on The House of Blogs.

Subtitle

Please write your answer here:
Suggested URL *

Please write your answer here:

The template for our URLs is https://xxxx.hypotheses.org.>

The URL must be short (no more than 10 characters) and must not contain accents, dashes, punctuation or special characters.

The URL and the blog's title do not have to be identical. However, the URL is permanent and cannot be modified once the blog is created.

Examples:

- https://oep.hypotheses.org (https://oep.hypotheses.org/) for the blog Open electronic publishing
- https://psan.hypotheses.org (https://psan.hypotheses.org) for Post-Soviet Armies Newsletter

Each URL is unique and attributed to one blog only. You can check whether a URL is available by typing it into your browser e.g. potentialname.hypotheses.org. If a blog is displayed, that means the URL is already taken.

To help you, you can read the section "How do I choose my URL?" in our frequently asked questions (https://hypotheses.org/faq).
The blog's editorial project presentation allows the Hypotheses team and Scientific Council to process your application. It should be as precise as possible. It must include the topics it will focus on, the blog's purpose, and can include the expected readership. The blog's editorial project presentation allows the Hypotheses team and Academic Council to process your application. It must contain a number of elements:

- a clear presentation of the scientific subject of your blog;
- a clear presentation of the editorial line, i.e. what guides your decisions and your choices of publication, and gives them coherence;
- the objectives you are pursuing with your blog and, possibly, the type of readership you are addressing.

Thus, this project must speak first and foremost about your future blog and not, for example, describe only the problematic and the axes of your research or your research programs. This text is published on the blog when it is created. It is also used to feed its bibliographic record once it is added to the Openedition catalogue. It can be modified after your registration.
This presentation text will be published on the blog’s record on the OpenEdition catalogue (http://www.openedition.org/catalogue-notebooks). The catalogue can display descriptions in several languages. You can use this functionality to increase your blog’s visibility on the internet. It can be shorter than the presentation in the main language and can be modified once the blog has been created.
Type of blog *

If you choose 'Other (specify)' please also specify your choice in the accompanying text field.
Please choose only one of the following:

- Event blog (e.g.: Inequality, Education and Social Power)
- Library blog (e.g.: Rare & Special)
- Researcher’s blog (e.g.: Botanical Letters)
- Debate and discussion blog (e.g.: We think History)
- Master’s blog (e.g.: EN-Globe)
- Methodology blog (e.g.: Quanti)
- Research programme blog (e.g.: Open Jerusalem)
- Publication support blog (e.g.: Vertigo)
- Seminar blog (e.g.: Mobilité, migrations et diaspora d’Asie du Sud)
- Research organization blog (e.g.: DARIAH-RE)
- Fieldwork blog (e.g.: Le blog de la grotte des Fraux)
- Thesis blog (e.g.: A muse of fire)
- News scan blog (e.g.: Le Cresson veille)
- Popular science blog (e.g.: The Recipes Project)
- Bibliography (e.g.: Bibliographie des éditions françaises du seizième siècle)
- Other

The choice of blog type has no noticeable effect on the blog’s appearance. It facilitates the validation of the blog application. The blog type is included when a blog is added to the catalogue, so that users can search for a particular type of blog in the OpenEdition catalogue.
What kind of content would you like to publish? *

1. Check all that apply

Please choose all that apply:

- Posts about news
- On-going research notes
- Books reviews

Tick as many boxes as you wish

Who will publish content on the blog?

*

Please choose only one of the following:

- A single blogger
- A team of bloggers

Step 2 - Migration from an existing blog

In certain cases, it is possible to migrate content from an existing blog to the Hypotheses platform (https://en.hypotheses.org/) (posts, authors, categories and media). We will confirm whether it is possible to migrate your content once your application has been accepted and your blog created.
Do you need to migrate contents from an existing blog? *
Please choose only one of the following:

- Yes
- No

What is the url of the original blog?

Please write your answer here:

Name of the hosting service (Blogspot, Wordpress, etc.) or software used (Joomla, Drupal, etc.).

Please write your answer here:
Upload the xml file of your previous blog.

Please upload at most one file
Kindly attach the aforementioned documents along with the survey

If you need help retrieving the xml file from your old blog, you can read the section "Can I import content from an existing blog into my new research blog? (https://hypotheses.org/faq)" of our frequently asked questions.

Step 3 - Thematic classification

You can choose to classify your blog in one or several disciplinary fields of the OpenEdition index.

Please note that this categorisation will not affect your blog’s referencing, design nor the functionalities available on it. This information will rather be used by our team during the evaluation of your proposal, in order to better understand your editorial project.

This categorisation becomes also a sorting facet in the browser of the OpenEdition catalogue (https://www.openedition.org/catalogue-notebooks?page=catalogue&pubtype=carnet&lang=en). This information will be displayed on your blog’s presentation page when it is added to our catalogue.

You may ask to change this categorisation at any moment.

Step 4 - Name and address

For the next questions, please indicate the details of the blog’s editor in chief (person who is in charge of and responsible for the blog). This person will be the Hypotheses team's main contact, particularly during the blog creation process. The main editor will have legal responsibility over the blog’s content. This form must be completed by the person responsible for the blog.

Please read the section "Once my research blog is open, what are my obligations? (https://hypotheses.org/faq)" in our frequently asked questions.

Which bloggers’ discussion list would you like to be subscribed to? *

1. Check all that apply

Please choose all that apply:

- [x] The French-language list
- [x] The Spanish-language list
- [x] The German-language list
- [x] The English-language list

Our discussion lists are the team’s main way of communicating with the Hypotheses blogging communities. The aim of the lists is to encourage bloggers to exchange tips and help each other (technical problems, tips, maintenance, technical changes, etc.). The Hypotheses team cannot provide in-depth support to each blog. We therefore strongly recommend that you subscribe to one of these lists. The lists are moderated by the Hypotheses team and by our international partners. Feel free to ask questions, provide answers and share your experiences. It is possible for several bloggers from the same blog to sign up to the lists; please write to us at hypotheses@openedition.org if this is the case.

Do you have an account on a/several social network(s)?

You can indicate your usernames here if you wish.

Please write your answer here:

This information is requested for communications purposes and to enhance the visibility of your content. However, it will not be taken into account when examining your application.

Please state whether your blog is affiliated to one or several institutions (CNRS, EHESS, university, learned society, laboratory, voluntary organization, etc.)

Please write your answer here:

It is possible for a blog not to be affiliated to an institution.
